“ We met Gene 14 years ago when we were looking for a home to buy. He was waiting outside a house when we pulled up, he stood up straight and smiled as we got out of our to greet him. He showed us a handful of houses and could tell by my face which house I disliked and the other that I chose. He agreed that it was “immaculate”, and we still live in the same house to this day. We will never forget him. He was so warm, welcoming, friendly, and funny. I tear up now because I miss him so much and then still laugh when I think of him and still remember his voice. When we were at the realty office sitting and talking with Tom Pendergast and Gene, my hubby was telling them about how we get mail with a misspelling of our last name, instead of Tanna/Victor Uribe we receive Urine. Gene exclaims “Victor piss”! The way he said it made us all bust out laughing! These guys were a riot to be around. I met them through my then hairdresser, Michelle, who was Tom’s wife. Gene was there with us through the inspection and closing, always making sure we were respected and fully taken care of. The inspector had just lost his wife a week or so before he came to help inspect the house. Gene said “we’re sorry to hear that”, and was very nice as always. During the closing, the lady who was taking care of it was rude and late. When we were signing paperwork, Gene checked over everything and pushed the paperwork back at her and you could tell he was not happy with her behavior. He was tough and defended us when we needed it, otherwise just the best guy ever to be around. He was like a big pappa teddy bear. He also helped us later on whenever we needed it with our computer problems, and met our daughter who was about 3 at the time. He just adored her and laughed at the things she would say when he was helping us look for a rental home a few years later. He told us in one house that our daughter said “it smells like snakes in here”! So funny!
