“ It's not fair and way to early. I love how you liked pictures and taking them. You sent me a bunch of memories of me when I growing. I will always remember our time at nannny and pa's. Grandma had to have us matching. Remember the leopard shirts? Many many great times growing up. Please give my mom a hug for me.

“ We met through social media. I loved her so much. She was always fun and entertaining. I loved seeing her posts. Loved her care package. A little taste of Milwaukee. I in turn sent her a little Pittsburgh love. She will be sadly missed by so many. She was a light that burned so bright that she flamed out far too soon. But those who knew her light will forever remember it's warmth. Love you, Sharbear! Until we meet again. 💔

“ About 17 years ago, when the start of the internet was in full bloom, I joined a message board about some crazy guys of a tv show called Jackass. Like minded people got together and laughed about their crazy stunts and friendships bloomed equally fast in our group.

I got particularly close with a then for me unknown character called Sherbear. Soon we were talking for hours and hours on that message board, moved to private message, e-mail and telephone calls (however difficult due to time zones and non functioning phones) and...and this might be the best of all....handwritten letters. Handwritten letters went to full on parcels with fun things, pictures, nikkaks as we called them, things from Milwaukee, Holland, clogs, stuffed animals, everything and anything.

I told my parents and partner about this amazing woman from Milwaukee and shared some of her stories with them. My then partner laughed when I was telling him about teaching Sherbear swearwords from Britain, Dutch crazy talk and basically everything that was FUN. When I think of Sherry, I think of fun. I think of laughter, I think of crazy faces, tattoos, art, pictures, La Push, friends, family, the bar, laughter. A lot of laughter. That is what you brought to my life and what I forever will try to honor.

I know you don't want me to cry, I know you want me to laugh about our random nonsense together and about the love we shared. Cause that was what it was.

Like everything in life, dynamics change and our love changed a bit over the years, but it was always there in some form or shape. That is what I take with me, the sound of your laughter and love. You made this world a better place and I know you're making wherever you are now equally as good.

Always. I love you wifey.

“ Even though we never met in person I considered you one of my closest friends. Your honesty, your bluntness, your I don't care what you think about me attitude and your love of art is probably why we connected like we did. You will be greatly missed by many. Take some killer shots of heaven for us!
